Matanzas was the worst sufferer from the effects of the war of all the cities. This city has a population of about 69,000. Here was located the greatest "reconcentrado" camp in Cuba. When the American soldiers came to this place the streets were filthy, business was stagmant and thousands of people were starving. The city has been cleansed and the people fed urtil the community now looks fairly prosperous, but the great harbor is still empty of ships and commerce has not been resumed to any extent. It will take several years of peace to reinstate Matanzas in the commercial position it held before the war. With Cuba highly developed Matanzas will become a great city with a trade second only to two or three places on the island.

Despite the efforts of the government, of societies and of individuals who have engaged in charitable work there are still less than 500 children in Matanzas in shelters provided for them. That there are many more is evident even from a casual stroll about the city. When the municipalities are organized power will be given them to raise money for the establishment of institutions to relieve this condition, but it will be at least a year and perhaps more before this can be done systematically and in the usual and proper way. In the meantime relief must be afforded as it is being given now by the government and by private charity. This is necessarily spasmodic and incomplete, for the government work is limited to impersonal conditions of need, and private effort is limited by the lack of funds at its disposal.

This is the time for those who are really concerned as to the welfare of Cuba to help in the care of the rising generation, for in this generation is the only hope of a permanent, stable and civilized republic. The children are dumb with the misery of their past, their bodies are poorly nourished, their minds stunted for work or play. It will take quick action to change all this, for the time in which it can be done is short. It will soon be too late to do more than restrain from evil by fear of punishment, and this is not a good start in the making of a free people.

"Has anything been done with regard to the establishment of the Episcopal Church in the Philippines?"
"There is something of that kind pending," replied the bishop.
From the Rev. Percy S. Grant, who accompanied the bishop as chaplain and secretary, I learned that the bishop while in Maniha had talked with Gen. He and his secretary, through the courtesy of Gen. Otis, were escorted to some of the army outgosts.

The Rev. Mr. Grant said that the forces of the Filipinos had been scattered and that the United States was in control. He paid a tribute to the splendid appearance of the American troops.
"There have been soldiers in as good physical trim, perhaps," said the Rev. Mr. Grant, "but I was especially impressed by the fine intelligence and the alertness shown in the faces of the men."

At 8.05 o'clock the train pulled out from the Baltimore and Ohio depot, and friends and Baltimore and Ohio depot, and friends and relatives left standing on the platform got a last glimpse of the jolly crowd of prisoners. The sentences to be served by the dozen lawbreakers ranged from two to seven years, and four of them, who had served penitentiary sentences before, understood it was their last chance until the expiration of their sentences to be hilarious, and it is unnecessary to state that derstood it was their inst chance until the expiration of their sentences to be hilarious, and it is unnecessary to state that they took advantage of the opportunity.

As the train pulled from under the railroad shed William King threw his hat to a friend and then all joined in a farewell song. From that time until 7 o'clock Tues morning there was no sleep for any one in the car. Prison experiences were one in the car. Prison experiences were related, songs were sung and the men took turns in reminding the others of what he or she might expect during the coming years. None of the prisoners had ever been at Moundsville, and the treatment they were to get was a matter of conjecture. Mary Braxton had served three or four terms, and if the treatment turned out to be as good as she had received at Albany and Trenton, she said, she would have no and the said she would have no and Trenton, she said, she would have no cause for complaint. Lunch was served several times during the night and the prisoners were in good spirits until the conductor entered the train in the morning and shouted:

the car. The women followed and soon the dozen prisoners were passing the big mound after which the town was named. A few minutes later they were lined up in Warden Hawk's office. Each answered roll call and then followed two of the prison guards to the interior, the women going one way and the men another. Half an hour later they were ready to go to the shops and start in to make brooms, clothing or, leather goods. They had then had their heads under the clipper and had been given a bath. The striped suits put on them were of odd sizes, and had their best friends seen the wearers they would hardly have recognized them.

Before going to the shops the men said good-bye to the Washington officers, and not until they are released will they again be permitted the freedom of conversing with each other.

The West Virginia Prison.

The West Virginia Prison.

The Moundsville penitentiary is the West Virginia state prison, although United States prisoners from several states are sent there from time to time. In the main building there are 500 cells, in which there is room for two bunks. Unless there is a I was aroused at about 3 a.m. by a noise large number of prisoners in the institution somewhere in the region of the dining room, large number of prisoners in the institution only each man is given a cell to himself. Besides the numbers of the cells the names of the occupants are put on each door-both, where there are two in a cell. There are tags attached also, where the occupant is on the black list or where he has some incurable disease. Prisoners when blacklisted are not permitted the usual enjoyments of the prison.

warden S. A. Hawk is a man whose ideas of humane treatment are at variance with those of many men holding similar posi-tions in other institutions. While he de-mands that a strict discipline shall be maintained at all times, he treats the cor victs well and does everything in his power to remind them that they have a future.

Manual of Instructions.

Each prisoner is furnished a manual upon his arrival at the prison, and if he is unable to read its contents are read to him. In the first place, he is informed by the manual: "This is a penal institution, consequently a place of restraint, discipline and deprivation. Yet this penitentiary may be made tion. Yet this penitentiary may be made not solely, nor even chiefly, a place of punishment, but rather one of reformation and help, a place which shall afford advantages mare or less as the inmate by his conduct proves himself worthy of enjoying.

"You are at all times to remember that

The manual also informs the prisoners of offenses against the laws of the state which they can commit while serving in prison. Penalties are prescribed for assaults, murder, defacing property and escaping.

has worked untringly, with them until he has taught them a number of tricke, which seem almost impossible when one considers the apparent lack of intelligence on the part of the subjects. In his Mill street house he has a large-bulk window, and here the alligators are displayed. They have been taught to do flip flaps and turn somersaults and put on juny boxing gloves for a fistic encountar. One is named Sharkey and the other laftries, and their passages at arms are eagerly, watched by scores of Bristol people who have never seen a real prize fight. An interesting feature of the prison is the establishment of a library and school. This is a new departure, and while the library is not yet two months old, Warden library is not yet two months old, Warden Hawk already sees good results. It was not until the library was established that the prisoners realized the amount of good it would do them. The 20th of January circular letters were sent to publishers as well as to citizens of the state of West Virginia, requesting contributions, with the result that there are now fully 10,000 volumes in the cases, including magazines. Some of the West Virginia newspapers also send copies of exchanges to the prison each week, and these papers are very acceptable.

The West Virginia senators and Representatives Dovener, Freer and Dayton were among those who contributed so generously to the library. One valuable collection was donated by the son of the deceased pastor of a Presbyterian church at Wheeling. The books represented a collection that was made during the fifty years their owner was pastor of the church. His son, anxious to carry out the wishes of his father with reference to the library, thought the penitentiary was the most worthy charity.

across the room in front of the book cases, while near the center of the room there is a handsome table which was made by one of the convicts. It is built of mahogany, ash and oak, and contains about nine hundred pieces of wood. Smaller tables are placed about the rocm, and it is about these tables the prisoners sit while attending school. While plans for the library were being discussed Warden Hawk concluded he would appoint Rody O'Meara, a Washington prisoner, to serve as librarian. O'Meara is an intelligent man, who seems particularly well adapted to the work, and suggestions made by him proved to be very acceptable.

Talk With the Librarian. In conversation with a Star reporter Librarian O'Meara said the prisoners from this city are, as a rule, brighter and more intelligent than those from the states. They eem particularly anxious to get books need of education as are many others.

During the time the library and school have been in operation only one prisoner has been reported for a violation of the rules, and he merely marked a book. While at school, the librarian said, the prisoners are attentive and all seem anxious to get the benefit of the teaching. The school is made up of classes of thirty, and one class is under instruction each night. Arithmetic, spelling and writing are taught. Of the prisoners in the penitentiary there are 210 illiterates—120 colored and ninety white. School is held six nights of each week.
